A Big Step

FRIDAY NIGHT LIGHTS? Boys take the spotlight.

Saturday afternoon national spotlight? That could require a gifted female athlete.

Someone like Sarah Fuller. The college soccer player from Sachse, outside Dallas, calmly stepped onto a football field November 28 in Columbia, Missouri, and kicked off for Vanderbilt University—becoming the first woman to play in a major college football game. Two weeks later she became the first to score in a game when she kicked two extra points against Tennessee.

“I just want to tell all the girls out there that you can do anything you set your mind to. You really can,” said Fuller, who was the goal-keeper November 22 when Vanderbilt won the Southeastern Conference women’s soccer championship.

All of the Commodores’ kickers were sidelined by COVID-19, so the football team recruited Fuller, who wore No. 32, her soccer number, and a sticker on her helmet that said “Play Like a Girl” when she made history.

E.H. Green of Terrell bought what is believed to be the first gasoline-powered automobile in Texas, in 1899—a phaeton runabout.

Green was also in the first car wreck in Texas. George Dorris, co-owner of St. Louis Motor Carriage Company, which made the car, was driving Green to Dallas to show it off, and they got crowded off the road by a farm wagon and drove into a ditch.

Power of Our People Building Community Health

DURING MORE THAN 15 years as a board member of the St. Mark's Medical Center Foundation, Michael Corker has helped south Central Texas address the challenges facing rural health care. At a time when rural hospitals were closing, St. Mark's opened in La Grange in 2005 and serves Fayette and Lee counties. The 100,000-square-foot, 65-bed facility, complete with specialty clinics, also is a member of Fayette EC.

"We can provide the same great level of health care found in major cities," says Corker, a Fayette Electric Cooperative member.

Regional health care is Corker's most demanding cause, but he has made his mark on the community in other ways, too. Gale Lincke, a Fayette EC board member and past chair of the Lower Colorado River Authority board, says, "Michael is kind, gentle and unassuming, and he does everything for the good of the community."

La Grange businesswoman Linda Morrison has worked with Corker on the town's historic Main Street program, as well as on other causes. "He is just as committed to picking up trash on the median for a Rotary Club project as he is to raising money to build a hospital," she said. "He works hard for what he believes is right."

WRITE ON

April 10 is National Encourage a Young Writer Day. Here's advice for young writers from Texas Co-op Power writers and editors:

Chris Burrows: Most editors are failed writers, but as T.S. Eliot famously said, "so are most writers."

Travis Hill: Write first, agonize later. You can't hone your prose if the page is blank.

Charles Lohrmann: Learn how to accept (and learn from) criticism without taking it personally.

Jessica Ridge: Revisions are fertile terrain for inspired writing. But know when to stop.

Thank you for Michael Hurd's thoughtful column on Black History Month [Time To Talk About That, February 2021], along with your tribute to war hero Doris Miller. Something that always inspires me about the United States is the degree of loyalty and devotion it inspires even in people it has treated poorly.

I so enjoyed the beautiful illustration by Paul Cox that accompanied Elaine A. Peña's interesting article [A Spectacle, by George; February 2021]. # THE SEED FLOURISHES

Former NFL player turns idea sowed in Houston into notable grapes and wines in Central Texas

An impressionable 10-year-old Alphonse Dotson happily trailed his grandfather, Alphonse Certenberg, as they toured the old man's Kashmere Gardens backyard in 1953 North Houston. They walked past two grazing mules, chicken pens, rabbit pens, a vegetable garden and two fishing boats underneath a carport draped with an arbor of ... grapes?!

Grandson asked grandfather, "You can grow grapes in Houston?"

In response, Certenberg just smiled, and off they went for deep-sea fishing in the Gulf.

"It was the first time I had been to his house," Dotson remembers, "and it was the best vacation week I ever had! The seed was planted."

That "seed" was Dotson's fascination with growing grapes, and the allure would lie dormant for decades—throughout a successful football career—and finally come to life in the sandy loam of the Hill Country, 115 miles northwest of Austin. There, Dotson and his wife, Martha Cervantes, became vintners. Their boutique winery in Voca grows several varieties of grapes and produces the award-winning Wines of Dotson-Cervantes from their 32-acre Certenberg Vineyards, a fitting homage to Dotson's late grandfather and a boyhood experience that was a harbinger for his future.

"Maybe once a week, from 1953, did I not think about growing grapes," says Dotson, 77, who was an NFL defensive end from 1965 to 1970, primarily playing for the Oakland Raiders and maverick owner Al Davis ("Just win, baby!"). Dotson played for Jack Yates High School in Houston's Third Ward, then at Grambling State University, where in 1964 he became the first small-college player named to a major All-America team.

There were days when he'd sit in his favorite restaurant at the Berkeley Marina, listening to a jazz pianist and pondering what he was going to do "after being, humbly, a gladiator."

And in those moments of deep thought, he kept returning to those grapes. Yet when the Sunday stadium din of Raider Nation ceased, Dotson began a journey to define his post-NFL life. He was destined to grow grapes for a living, but, for a change, that was somehow the furthest thing from his mind as he dabbled in event promotion, oil field trucking, being a sports agent and traveling—most fortuitously to Mexico and Spain.

Dotson settled for 15 years in Acapulco, which is where the Raiders caught up with him in 1994. NFL teams often include former players on junkets, and the Raiders invited him to travel to Barcelona, where the team was playing a preseason game against the Denver Broncos.

Also on the trip was Kam McLeod, son-in-law to one of the Raiders' part owners. McLeod owned a vineyard in Rutherford, California, and invited Dotson and Cervantes to visit.

"My research into growing grapes started with my Oakland Raiders family," Dotson says. "I visited with [McLeod] and was introduced to different kinds of soils, grapes and came back to Acapulco and started charting all that I learned. Martha said, 'You don't grow no plants here!' But you have to be listening to who's talking to you that you can't see, and then you have to pay attention."

By 1995, Dotson was fully locked in to learning about grape growing and the wine industry, and Cervantes came aboard, reluctantly. The couple met in Acapulco, where she helped him find a residence. She was a highly valued employee for a timeshare company that managed resorts worldwide, working her way up from concierge to director of member services. Dotson says he kidnapped her from a job she couldn't be fired from.

"I fell to the ground when he said, 'We may have to move to Texas,'" she says with a laugh, but move they did—away from the lush mountains, Pacific Coast beaches, nightlife and other attractions of Acapulco, to Central Texas, where "the only neighbors you have are cows and horses. The kids said, 'Mom, you gotta get us outta here!' But we never gave up. God kept us together."

Dotson's last act as a sports agent was to negotiate a deal with the Green Bay Packers for his free-agent son, Santana, who also played at Yates and was a 1991 All-America defensive end at Baylor University. Dotson used his commission to purchase the land for his vineyard, and the couple moved to Texas in 1997.

"We didn't know doodly-squat about growing grapes," Cervantes says.

For all he and Cervantes lacked in grape-growing and winemaking knowledge, they made up for in hard work and study, talking with soil and winemaking experts, scientists, grape growers, and other experts who took the time to mentor and advise them. And they hit it big in 2008 with their first wine, Gotas de Oro—drops of gold. Made from orange muscat grapes, the wine is described as "a medley of fruits—pears, star fruit and ripe peaches." Among its many awards, Gotas won gold at the 2019 Houston Livestock Show and Rodeo.

Before producing their own wines, they focused solely on growing grapes (cabernet sauvignon, merlot and chardonnay) for Ed and Susan Auler, owners of Fall Creek Vineyards in Tow. Ed Auler has called Dotson's grapes "the best in Texas."

Jeff Cope, founder of the Texas Wine Lover website, declares, "I can honestly say that he has perfected white wines, dry all the way up to sweet."

Despite the couple's initial success, several years of late freezes caused grape production to drop, from yields of 110 tons to only 2 tons. Now there are plans for growth, including an expansion of the tasting room that will add a dining area and paving the dusty, rocky access road that is not unlike Dotson's path to success.

Ever amiable, Dotson flashes a wide, toothy smile and welcomes visitors to the tasting room, adorned with oversized photos of his playing days and magazine covers featuring him and his wife. Between sampling sips, he explains the design of their label, which features his signature floppy cowboy hat and a rose, symbolic of the yellow roses he gave Cervantes when they courted in Acapulco.

The label is distinctively silver and black with a background of the Raiders' shield.

"I wanted a label that represents both of us," he says, "but I also wanted to give a nod to Al and the guys I played with ... and to agitate the damn Dallas Cowboys!"

"When I asked Al's permission, he said, 'Just have fun, baby!'" ■

THE RUNAWAY SCRAPE

Exodus of Texians is an unsung episode of the Texas war
for independence

The Texas Revolution is defined by its battles—the siege of the Alamo, the massacre at Goliad, the 18-minute Battle of San Jacinto that sealed the Texian victory. But there was a slower struggle that wet spring of 1836 that defined the revolution’s civilian strife. As Gen. Antonio López de Santa Anna amassed troops across the Rio Grande, Texian rebels and noncombatants fled the looming conflict.

This eastward frantic flight from Mexican troops, toward the Sabine River—which separates Texas from Louisiana—and the safety of the United States, came to be known as the Runaway Scrape.

“The Runaway Scrape touched virtually every citizen in Texas,” says Stephen L. Hardin, professor of history at Abilene’s McMurry University, describing the exodus as the great untold story of the Texas Revolution. “I think the Runaway Scrape, far more than the battles, played a major role in the forging of the Texian character.

“It is tremendously important because if you look at the Texas mythos—Texans are tough, Texans are resilient, this notion that we can endure damn near anything because we’re Texans. I think that’s where it starts.”

OPPOSITE The southern terminal of the Lynchburg Ferry sits across from the San Jacinto Monument. ABOVE A sculpture by J. Payne Lara at the San Felipe de Austin State Historic Site depicts a family fleeing in the Runaway Scrape. RIGHT The historic site’s museum features an interactive map of the 19th-century town.

Colonists began their flight from conflict well ahead of the fall of the Alamo in March 1836, and for some of them, the escape culminated within a mile of the San Jacinto battlefield site in a dramatic crossing of the San Jacinto River. There, 5,000 settlers waited their turn at Lynch’s Ferry, desperate to outrun Santa Anna and his approaching troops.

About the time of the fall of the Alamo, Hardin says, the Runaway Scrape “goes into hyperdrive.” Sam Houston and his small, inexperienced army began a retreat from Gonzales, where the army had been gathering. The order to evacuate came at midnight March 13, and the Texians burned the town before they left.

As Houston continued his retreat, many of the 30,000 residents of Texas—including Anglos, enslaved people and Mexican nationals—fled Santa Anna’s army in the rain and cold, carrying what possessions they could on muddy roads and across flood-swollen rivers. In an April 1836 letter to a friend, colonist John A. Quitman remarked, “We must have met at least 1,000 women and children, and everywhere along the road were wagons, furniture and provisions abandoned.”

Dilue Rose Harris was 11 when she fled her home in Stafford’s Point, just southwest of what is today Houston, with her family. In 1898 she wrote of her memories of the Runaway Scrape: “We left home at sun-set. Hauld bedding clothing and provision on the sleigh with one yোক of oxen. Mother and I walking she with an infant in her arms.”

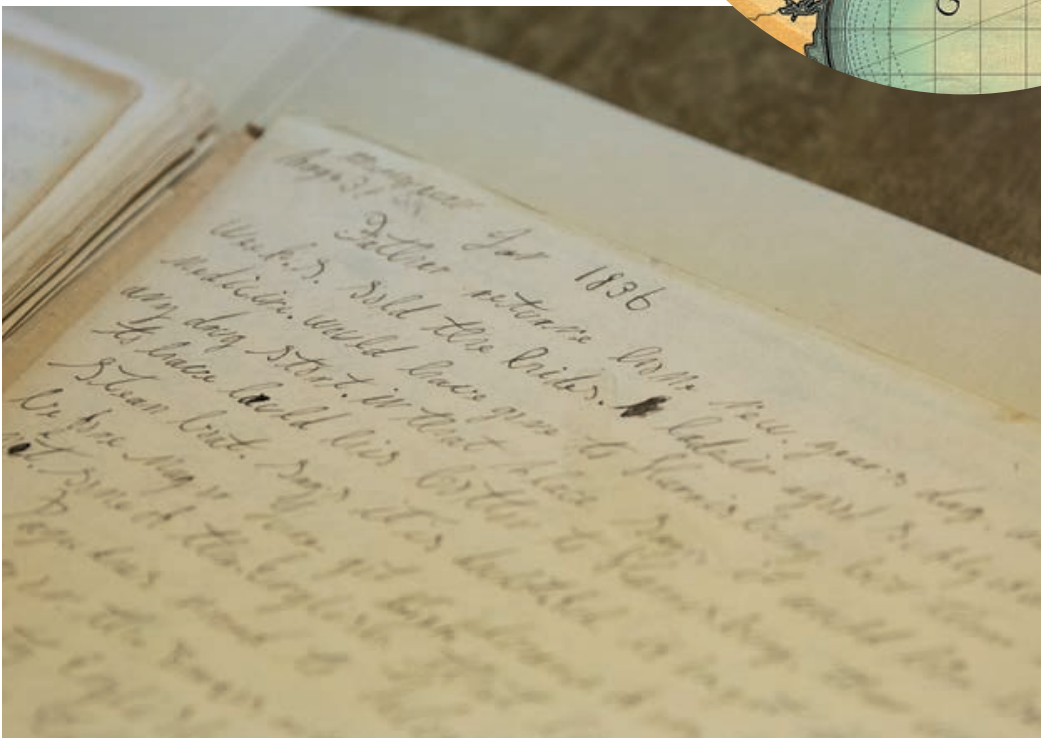

Guy Bryan, a nephew of Stephen F. Austin, was 16 when he fled his home near San Felipe de Austin with his family. He told his story in an 1895 letter to Kate Terrell, a survivor of the Runaway Scrape and writer who chronicled the event. “Some families left their home with their table spread for the daily meal; all hastily prepared for flight as if the enemy were at their door,” he wrote.

The second-largest city in Texas on the eve of the revolution, San Felipe had close to 600 residents and was a bustling center of government and commerce. As in the town of Gonzales, the Texians and their army burned the town behind them, a strategy to deny Santa Anna’s troops food and supplies.

Angelina Peyton Eberly, a tavern owner, recalled in a letter to a friend the evening she evacuated San Felipe across the Brazos River: “Much was left on the river banks. There were no wagons hardly ... few horses, many had to go on foot the mud up to their knees—women and children pell mell.” Safely across the river, Eberly could hear “the popping of spirits, powder &c [etc.] in our burning homes.”

Creed Taylor, a Texian soldier who escorted his family to safety before fighting in the Battle of San Jacinto, wrote in 1900, “I have never witnessed such scenes of distress and human suffering. ... Delicate women trudged alongside their park horses, carts, or sleds from day to day until their shoes were literally worn out, then continued the journey with bare feet, lacerated and bleeding at almost every step. Their clothes were scant, and with no means of shelter from frequent rains and bitter winds, they traveled on through the long days in wet and bedraggled apparel, finding even at night little relief from their suffering since the wet earth and angry sky offered no relief. ... Thus these half-clad, mud-besmeared fugitives, looking like veritable savages, trudged along.”

Harris, Bryan and Eberly converged with other refugees at Lynch’s Ferry, on the south bank of the San Jacinto River, within a mile of the future battlefield at San Jacinto. “Arrived at the San Jacinto River in the night,” wrote Harris. “There were fully 5,000 people at the ferry. ... We waited three days before we crossed. ... It was all-most a riot to see who should cross first.”

The crossing was daunting. The ferry was a wooden, flat-bottomed raft, hand-drawn along cables. A few dozen people and possessions could travel per trip.

After crossing the ferry at Lynchburg, Bryan and his party moved 6 miles southeast. “When we joined the long line of ‘Runaways’ at Cedar Bayou the sight was most piteous. I shall never forget the sight of men, women and children walking, riding on horseback, in carts, sleds, wagons and every kind of transportation known to Texas.”

Many became ill or died along the route. There are no official records of deaths, but historians estimate hundreds died. “Measles, sore eyes, whopping cough, and every other disease that man, woman or child is heir to, broke out among us,” wrote Harris. Her younger sister died of a flux—diarrhea—and was buried at Liberty. With scant updates, families kept moving east, toward the Sabine River and the safety of the United States.

Harris recalled one evening: “All of asddnt we heard a report like distant thunder. ... Father said it was cannon that the Texas army and Mexicans were fighting.” They thought the Texians had lost because the cannon fire ended so quickly. They hurried eastward until a messenger found them and yelled, as Harris wrote, “Turn back, turn back. The Texas army has whipped the Mexicans. No danger, no danger.”

Relieved but exhausted, many halted their exodus. Refugee camps sprang up for families to rest and regroup. “They suffered just as much and sometimes more on the return trip,” Hardin says. Many returned to find their homes burned and their livestock missing.

Harris’ memoirs recall quicksand and a fatal alligator attack when they turned back toward home after five weeks on the run. Eberly had traveled more than 100 miles before hearing of the victory at San Jacinto. Once back in San Felipe, Eberly found her tavern and home in ashes, “the place bare of everything but the ruins of all my things burnt up,” she wrote. Many residents, including Eberly, abandoned San Felipe de Austin, which never regained its former stature. Many left Texas for good after the spring of 1836. For those who stayed, the scrape left a scar.

Hardin explains that many Texians were hesitant to rebuild after the war. “I’ve found many people saying they don’t want to invest in a fancy house because the Mexicans might invade again, and we’re going to have to burn it down again,” he says. “So that plays a huge role in the Texian psyche for years because they just didn’t have the confidence.

“‘Remember the Alamo’? What they’re remembering is the Runaway Scrape and the hardship.” ■

Lessons Learned

MANY PEOPLE ARE ASKING about what happened to Texas during the February winter weather event. Why did we have rolling blackouts? Why were my lights out for so long? I will attempt to briefly explain and share what happened at Houston County Electric Cooperative.

There were many contributing factors to the rolling blackouts, but the primary driver was an insufficient supply of gas. The Texas electricity market is highly dependent on gas-supplied power plants. During the record cold weather, gas wells and transmission pipelines froze while some gas was being shipped north to run power plants out of state, as most of the country was in a deep freeze. Texas, normally rich with gas supply, didn't have much storage set aside to make up for the shortfall.

Insufficient generation reserve was another factor. Aging coal plants have been retired due to market conditions and costly environmental regulations. Our energy supply mix has shifted to more solar and wind. Solar and wind are wonderful resources in terms of cost and environmental impact, but they provide limited capacity support. You cannot control the amount of wind and solar available without battery storage, which hampers our ability to respond to extreme weather conditions. We cannot make the sun shine or the wind blow.

The lack of weatherization of power plants and gas pipelines further crippled infrastructure. Just like many homes were not prepared for sustained cold weather, much of our infrastructure was not properly prepared. Equipment froze up and broke down, and plants went offline as consumers across the state were turning up their heat. Supply was going down as demand was going up, and we were entering a crisis situation.

And yes, the rolling blackouts were necessary. The best analogy I can share is when a doctor is treating a victim from a car wreck, and they have to choose to amputate a leg or lose the patient. It is an awful decision because you want to keep the leg and save the patient. If we did not shed load, the entire state would have experienced a widespread blackout for many, many days.

Our members in the Oakwood and Groveton areas were shed by our power supplier. Houston County EC was not in control of the load shed actions of our power supplier. We were left off for over two days. As we were restored, load was so high when we attempted to reenergize that our supplier could not maintain service to us. Ultimately, we had to break up restoration into small sections, bringing people back on a little at a time and letting the load settle down to normal levels before restoring the next section. It was extremely time-consuming.

We had over 80 man-hours in restoration of Oakwood alone—not for damage but for dealing with the aftermath of an extended blackout while freezing conditions continued. If we were in a wide-scale blackout, the same time-consuming steps to restore power in small increments would have been required for the entire state, ultimately leaving millions more consumers without power for much, much longer.

For our load shed actions, we rotated outages more frequently, allowing at least two hours with power and minimizing outage time to approximately 45 minutes. We never want you to be without power, and we are grateful for your sacrifices. As the situation with the electric grid began to improve, the tail of the cold weather system moved through our area with ice. Trees began falling, taking our lines down with them. We doubled our workforce with assistance from fellow cooperatives and right-of-way contractors and began picking up the pieces. It was slow, tedious work.

We understood you were cold, tired and miserable. Many of us were in the same situation as you, but we persevered. We worked diligently to safely restore your service as fast as we could. We always wish it was faster. It simply takes time to clear the amount of damage we sustained.

The conditions in February were unlike anything we have ever faced. Please know you have a team of dedicated employees that truly care about you and your well-being. We will do whatever it takes to serve you to the best of our ability. ■

HELPING US will help you

During outages it is imperative that Houston County EC crews have access to your property. Ease of access allows crews to get in, get to work and get out quickly and safely. Time is of the essence when dealing with power outages. Making phone calls to non-operating phone numbers, calling the neighboring landowner to gain access, as well as climbing fences and walking miles impedes on Houston County EC's crews and contractors from restoring power for you and your neighbors.

We will always respect your property and your right to privacy when accessing your location. We only access our lines for maintenance repair and inspection.

YOU CAN HELP BY:

- Requesting a co-op lock be installed at your location.
- Providing us with the combination to your lock.
- Updating your phone numbers on your account.

With more than 5,000 miles of power lines serving more than 21,000 meters, co-op crews and contractors are always in the field, working to keep power flowing. With unpredictable weather being a top cause of outages, our crews need access to powerlines all hours of the day and night, in all kinds of weather.

Our Friends in High Places

IF YOU WERE TO associate Houston County Electric Cooperative with one image or person, we can almost guarantee you'd think of a lineworker. They're the most visible employees of the co-op, and they work tirelessly to ensure our community isn't left in the dark. Line work is listed as one of the top 10 most dangerous jobs in the U.S. Understandably so, as they perform detailed tasks near high-voltage power lines as well as balancing themselves, their safety gear and their equipment atop 40-foot-tall poles. ■

Please join us in showing appreciation to our lineworkers, the ones who light up our lives.

HCEC Remains Strong—Providing Stable Electric Rates

WE REALIZE YOU have may seen the news about horrific electric bills issued across the state. Consumers with home electric bills that normally averaged $100 or $200 received bills for more than $5,000. We want to reassure you that that will not happen at Houston County Electric Cooperative. Our mission to deliver safe, reliable and affordable electric service remains unchanged, and we are not going anywhere.

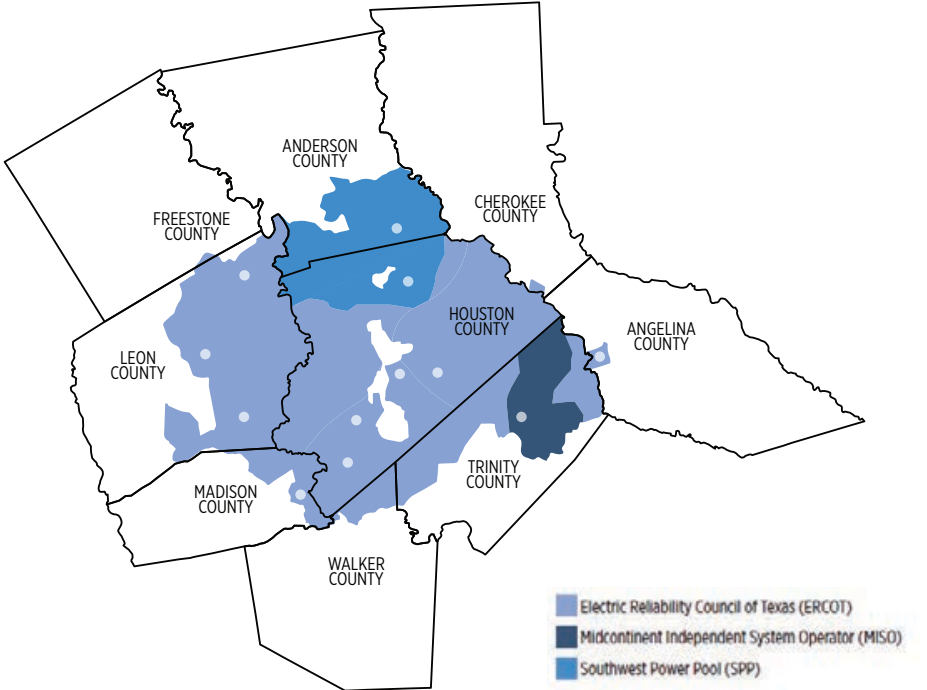

Your electric bill is tied directly to the amount of electricity you use—usage that may have increased at your home as your heater worked overtime during February’s bitterly cold weather. Rest assured, we did not raise our rates in February, and we never charge members for electricity when their power is off. Most importantly, Houston County EC does not anticipate a significant increase to the overall cost of the power we provide.

Electric cooperatives have a long history of working with Texas’ leaders to ensure your electricity remains safe, reliable and affordable. We don’t yet know all the impacts of February’s extreme weather, but we remain focused on developments at the Legislature as we work with our statewide association, Texas Electric Cooperatives, to protect our members and employees from any potential effects. Throughout this assessment and learning process, we pledge to keep our members informed every step of the way. ■

Understanding the Texas Power Grid

THE POWER GRID in Texas is split among four operators: the Electric Reliability Council of Texas, Southwest Power Pool, Midcontinent Independent System Operator and the Western Electricity Coordinating Council. Houston County Electric Cooperative operates in three of those markets, which are highlighted by area in the map at right. Electricity is carried over a network, or grid, that connects power plants to substations across the state and from each of those substations to the distribution lines that supply power to homes and businesses. Grids are generally not interconnected and operate independently, with unique rules and regulations. ■

What happens

High-Voltage Transmission Lines

Transmission Substation

1. Transmission towers and lines that supply power to one or more transmission substations rarely fail. However, when damage does occur, these towers and lines must be repaired before other parts of the distribution system are inspected.

Large Industrial User

Make sure you report any outage to your electric co-op. This helps to isolate the problem and repair it as soon as possible.

Restoring the power after a thunderstorm, tornado, ice storm or flood involves much more than just flipping a switch at a substation or pulling a tree off a downed power line. Highly trained workers from your local electric cooperative, crews from neighboring co-ops and even specialists will work together around the clock to restore service in areas affected by severe weather.

Shown here are the steps co-ops follow in restoring power. At each stage, the primary goal is getting the greatest number of co-op members back on line in the shortest time possible.

during a power outage?

Local Distribution Substation

2. Local distribution substations serve co-op members. When a major outage takes place, these substations usually are checked first to see if the problem is in the transmission system to the substations or the substations themselves.

Local Distribution Substation

3. If the problem cannot be isolated at a local distribution substation, the next step is to check the distribution lines that carry power to groups of customers such as towns or housing developments.

Small Businesses

Schools

Homes

5. Finally, isolated outages are repaired. If you or a family member depend on life support, call your electric co-op before an outage occurs. Then your co-op can make every effort to prioritize power restoration to you—or can advise you to seek shelter elsewhere.

Farms

4. Then line crews work on outages that are more localized by inspecting the final power supply lines to small businesses, schools and homes.

Texas-native sea turtles need responsible beachgoers to support comeback

BY AMANDA OGLE • PHOTO BY SUE WOLFE

A KEMP'S RIDLEY SEA TURTLE emerges from the Gulf of Mexico onto a Padre Island beach and clambers toward a dune in search of a place to dig a nest and lay up to 100 eggs. Before she finds the right spot, beachgoers approach and take photographs. Instead of nesting, the frightened turtle retreats into the water.

This is a scenario that Nancy Lubbock, a volunteer with the Padre Island National Seashore's Division of Sea Turtle Science and Recovery, has witnessed several times. "You just don't know where she's going to end up or lay the eggs," says Lubbock.

Donna Shaver, chief of the division, is fearful when nesting turtles are frightened back into the water. If the turtle heads back into the surf before laying eggs, it could be days before she comes ashore again.

"She needs to lay those eggs then and there," Shaver says. "Just the process of her coming on the beach makes her vulnerable to coyotes or people."

Every year, from April to mid-July, Kemp's ridley sea turtles, a critically endangered species, shuffle onto Texas beaches to lay eggs. Each one is onshore less than an hour, but some beachgoers are lucky enough to witness the process. "Just let her do her thing and realize how lucky you are to get to see one of these turtles," Shaver says. "You've hit the jackpot."

Look but don't touch, Shaver says. It's illegal and harmful. "We don't even touch them without gloves," she says, "and you can harm them by squeezing the eggs or turtles too much."

Staff and volunteers with Shaver's program find, document and protect Kemp's ridleys. They retrieve the precious eggs and incubate them 50–60 days, until they hatch. Then the hatchlings can be released into the Gulf.

Over the past several years, Kemp's ridleys' numbers have increased in Texas overall, but the number of nests found on South Padre Island National Seashore has fluctuated recently from a high of 219 in 2017 to 136 in 2020. In 1994, only a single nest was found.

Kemp's ridleys are the smallest of the five sea turtle species in the Gulf, making it hard to see their tracks in the sand. They also love to nest on windy days, in high tide and during big weather fronts, so their faint tracks are often blown or washed away.

"Kemp's ridleys are very hard to spot," Shaver says. "And with their tracks getting blown away or obliterated by rain, people on the beach sometimes don't know to watch out for them."

In Texas, driving on beaches is allowed, and that makes Kemp's ridleys vulnerable to inattentive drivers. Shaver explains that the turtles like the soft sand of the beach roadways. She works to educate people on the turtles' habits, hoping to achieve a balance between recreation and protection.

Maureen Hurlow, a volunteer with the program since 2005, says that one of the most crucial precautions beachgoers can take is driving slowly and observing speed limits. When turtles are nesting, she explains, they go into a trance and become vulnerable to vehicles. "We haven't seen a turtle get hit on the national seashore, but we know it's happened in South Texas," she says. "We feel as the turtle population increases, and people are not watching out for them, it's only a matter of time because the turtles are very hard to see. Just slow down; you'll get there."

Another threat to Kemp's ridleys' resurgence is people digging holes in the sand for fire pits or sand castles. Nesting turtles and hatchlings can fall into holes and get trapped. To prevent this, it's important that beachgoers fill in any holes they dig. Lubbock also advocates taking everything you bring to the beach back home—especially water bottles, plastic bags and fishing line. "The line gets wrapped around their flippers, and they can get caught in trash and canopies," she says. "Water bottles and plastic bags also look like squid to them, and they try and eat them, which will kill them."

Kemp's ridleys have been around for 4 million years, and conservationists are determined to help them thrive. "We're going to have to all do our part and continue to work hard to make sure Kemp's ridleys continue to have success," Lubbock says. ■

The Bluebonnet Lady of Texas

A San Antonio civic leader galvanized women's groups to save the state flower

BY SHERYL SMITH-RODGERS • ILLUSTRATION BY DAVID VOGIN

BLUEBONNETS WERE SO overpicked in the early 1920s that Sallie Ward Beretta worried they'd go extinct. The San Antonio civic leader launched a conservation campaign, which she unveiled at a luncheon for the City Federation of Women's Clubs.

Beretta placed paper bluebonnets on each table to help make her point: Unless the women got behind her campaign, she exhorted, the state flower would exist only as paper blooms. Everyone there joined her cause.

So did the San Antonio Area Council of Girl Scouts, where Beretta served as president. To further her cause, Beretta recruited volunteers to gather and package bluebonnet seeds from fields around the city. She then mailed seed packets to Scout troops and women's clubs across the state. Some seeds even crossed state and national borders, and recipients in Alaska, New York and even South America reported growing successes to Beretta.

To bolster her campaign, Beretta collected stories, poems and music about bluebonnets, such as the Texas Bluebonnet Song by Julia D. Owen of Navasota. She also hosted gardening experts and promoted the slogan: "Save the wild-flowers of Texas."

In an October 26, 1923, letter, she implored members of a Laredo social club not to change their organization's name from the Blue Bonnet Club to the Border Lassies, lobbying for her conservation movement, which was "getting people to promise not to tear them up by the roots."

She wrote that noted landscape artist Julian Onderdonk of San Antonio "devoted his life to immortalizing the bluebonnet," describing him as "our greatest Texas painter." Two weeks before the artist died, Beretta confided, "He told me that he considered the move that I was starting for the conservation of the bluebonnet was one of the finest ever started, and that he would do all he could to help it."

Her pleas hit home. The group changed its name back to the Blue Bonnet Club. The following January, members said in the Laredo Times that they planned a bluebonnet campaign for spring.

Beretta's bluebonnet work continued into the 1930s. In March 1931 she and her Scouts sought to ban the sale of bluebonnets in market stands and stores. "The Girl Scouts each year gather bluebonnet seeds and plant many of them along the highways," The San Antonio Express reported. "Doubtless many of the flowers being sold were from plants that grew from seeds sown by the scouts." Two years later Beretta directed a film made by the Girl Scouts that featured bluebonnet scenes. She and the Scouts also lobbied, unsuccessfully, to change the name of the Sunken Garden Theater in Brackenridge Park to the Bluebonnet Bowl.

Beretta became widely known as the "Bluebonnet Lady of Texas." But her civic-mindedness reached far beyond wildflowers. Her leadership roles included 19 years on the board of regents for Texas State University, then called the Southwest Texas State Teachers College. On the San Marcos campus, Beretta Hall, a Spanish-style dorm named in her honor, still houses students, and an annual award to an outstanding female student is given in her name. ■

Fresh Herbs

Give dishes, including scones, lentils and smoked pork, a distinctive zing

BY MEGAN MYERS, FOOD EDITOR

One of the greatest pleasures of having a garden is the ability to go outside and snip a few fresh herbs for a meal. It's a bonus that herbs are easy to grow because a simple sprinkling of them can take a dish to the next level. These savory scones are a wonderful addition to a breakfast spread, paired with smoked salmon. Or serve them alongside soups and stews at dinner. The mini size is perfect for nibbling, but you can make eight larger scones instead, if you prefer.

Dill Scones

2 cups flour
¼ cup chopped fresh dill
2 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
4 tablespoons very cold butter
¾ cup milk, plus 1 tablespoon, divided use

1. Preheat oven to 350 degrees and line a baking sheet with parchment.
2. In a large bowl, combine flour, dill, baking powder, salt and pepper. Grate the butter into the bowl, then stir to combine so that butter is coated with flour mixture. Alternatively, cut in butter with a pastry blender or two knives.
3. Stir in ¾ cup milk and mix until a shaggy dough forms. Scoop dough out onto a floured surface and knead a few times to form a cohesive ball. Divide dough into two balls and flatten each to a circle about ½ inch high. Cut each circle into wedges then place onto baking sheet. Brush the tops with remaining tablespoon of milk.
4. Bake 18–20 minutes, until golden.

Texas Hummus

JOY WATSON
NAVASOTA VALLEY EC

If you're a fan of dips, this take on hummus is an excellent addition to your recipe box. Watson created this recipe for a family hummus cook-off, adding the familiar Texas flavors of cilantro and tomatoes with chiles to the Mediterranean classic.

2 tablespoons olive oil
½ cup chopped sweet onion
½ cup fresh cilantro
¼ cup fresh parsley
¼ teaspoon cumin
¼ teaspoon dried oregano
¼ teaspoon grated fresh garlic
(about 1 clove)
1 can (10 ounces) diced tomatoes with mild green chiles
1 can (15 ounces) garbanzo beans
Salt and pepper, to taste
Tortilla chips, to serve

1. Heat olive oil in a sauté pan over medium heat. Sauté onion, cilantro, parsley, cumin, oregano and garlic until the onions are translucent, about 8 minutes.
2. Drain the tomatoes and add to the vegetables to warm. Drain the garbanzo beans and pour into a blender or food processor. Add the warm vegetables to the beans. Pulse the mixture until it is the consistency of a dip but not completely smooth. Taste and add salt and pepper as desired. Serve with tortilla chips.

Herbaceous Lentils Crockpot-Style

PAMELA RYMAN-MOIR
WOOD COUNTY EC

Cozy up to a bowl of flavorful lentils simmered with pork and herbs. Brown lentils are ideal for this dish, as they retain their shape and texture well during long cooking times. Serve with rice if you like or enjoy on its own.

SERVES 8

1 tablespoon olive oil
1 pound ham steak, diced
4–6 strips bacon, chopped
1 onion, diced
1 clove garlic, minced
4 cups water
1 sprig fresh rosemary, leaves finely chopped
1 sprig fresh thyme, leaves chopped
1 sprig fresh sage, leaves chopped
1 bag (16 ounces) lentils, rinsed
⅓ cup shredded carrot
1 small bunch kale, finely chopped
Salt and pepper, to taste
Brown or white rice (optional)
Fresh chopped cilantro (optional)

1. In a large sauté pan, heat olive oil over medium heat and cook ham and bacon until bacon is crispy. Stir in onion and garlic and cook 15 minutes. (If you have a slow cooker with a sauté setting, you can use that instead.)
2. Add pan contents, water, herbs and lentils to a slow cooker. Cook on low 2–4 hours, until beans are soft and done but not mushy.
3. During the last hour of cooking, add carrot. Add kale during the last 15 minutes of cooking. Taste and season with salt and pepper as desired. Serve over rice with fresh cilantro sprinkled on top, if desired.

Herb-Crusted Pork Loin

DONALD MCMAHON
CENTRAL TEXAS EC

Adding herbs to your smoker recipes adds even more flavor. McMahon's recipe calls for resting the pork overnight before cooking, so plan ahead. If you don't have a smoker, you can roast the tenderloin in the oven at 350 degrees for 30 minutes.

¾ cup fresh cilantro
½ cup fresh oregano
1 tablespoon olive oil
1 tablespoon whole-grain mustard
1 tablespoon cumin

3 cloves garlic, minced
Juice of 1 large lime
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
16–20 ounces pork tenderloin

1. Combine all ingredients except for pork in a blender or food processor and pulse to form a paste. Taste and adjust salt and pepper as needed. Make 1-inch slits on both sides of the pork loin and coat completely with paste. Refrigerate overnight.

2. When ready to cook, preheat smoker to 225 degrees. Smoke pork 2–3 hours, until it registers 145–160 degrees on a meat thermometer. Let rest 5 minutes before slicing and serving.

SERVES 4–6

TCP WEB EXTRA We have nearly 900 searchable recipes at TexasCoopPower.com, and herbs enhance many of them. Consider them part of your recipe collection.

Fresh Herb Tips

BY MEGAN MYERS

1. Store fresh herbs in a glass or uncovered jar with a few inches of water. Trim the stems so the leaves sit above the edge of the container, and store on the counter or loosely covered in the refrigerator.

2. Maximize herb flavor by chopping finely, which releases more flavorful oils. Make sure to dry them as much as possible beforehand to prevent sticking to the blade.

3. Chop fresh herbs and freeze in ice cube trays with a small amount of olive oil to use as needed.

4. Fresh herbs unavailable? Dried herbs can be substituted, but keep in mind that they are more potent in flavor. You'll need about ⅓ the quantity of dried herbs than fresh, so use a teaspoon of dried for every tablespoon of fresh chopped herbs.

Heart of the Matter

Set yourself on a course for smack-dab in the middle of the state

BY CHET GARNER

EVERY TEXAN MUST make a pilgrimage to the Alamo and also stop by the state fair to yell “Howdy” at Big Tex. I’ll add another trip to the mandatory list: one to the heart of the Lone Star State.

Texas has a funny shape. Recognizable? Sure. But odd. The idea that someone was able to find the true geographic center of such an irregularity is amazing. But that’s what the Texas Society of Professional Surveyors accomplished by dividing the state into quadrants and confirming the point where the lines intersect. Near that surveyor-approved dot, about 20 miles northeast of Brady, is our destination.

I reached Brady with time to circle its castlelike courthouse and medieval historic jail-turned-county museum. I noticed an abundance of hearts about town and a profusion of businesses using “Heart of Texas” like a country song slogan before I headed north on Texas 377.

I enjoyed the passing landscape dotted with farmhouses. Suddenly, a silver-and-black historical marker appeared. I hit the brakes and veered into a parking area. I got out of my truck and took a deep breath, realizing I was indeed standing in the center of the state I love so much.

I didn’t hear a George Strait song or receive a mysterious message from Sam Houston. In fact, there is not much other than the marker and a fence line of rough cedars. Yet I felt Texan to the core. Now I understand this is the true heart of Texas. It doesn’t hit you in the eye or the stomach but right in the heart. ■

Flashes of the Past

Lightning bugs, whether in a jar or flitting freely, still cause wonder

BY BILL SANDERSON

IT WAS THE mid-1950s when my cousins and I discovered the lightning bugs that brought enchantment when we needed it most, after our granddad, H.L. “Livvy” Meador, had recently been boosted to heaven off a Buick’s big bumper as he walked home across Buckner Boulevard one night after church. His death left our grandmother, Ella (“Nonnie”), a lonely widow and cast her daughters in a support orbit along with all of us cousins. We visited her every night.

In late spring and summer, with no air conditioning, we stayed outside, leaping with the lightning bugs that glimmered through Nonnie’s spacious Dallas yard, their blinking radar butts of amber and green a wondrous delight. We captured them by the dozens in Ball canning jars, ice pick holes poked in the top for air.

When the night got cool, Nonnie would go to bed, and we’d head home, but a ritual had begun that still holds wonder.

Powered by silent wings, the wafting lantern bodies of flying beetles are mesmerizing. Lightning bugs don’t bite, sting, smell or sound. All they do in April, May and June is flash a mating ritual come-hither code. They even have the innate good manners to fly low and slow, so any kid can catch one.

Nonnie’s daughters, Nell and Eula Mae (my mother), eventually converted the houses on Grandfather Meador’s acre into a kindergarten and private first grade called Little Folks School. In a backyard cottage we learned to read aloud in unison, with Nell as our teacher. Often she admonished me, with uneven success, “Bill, pay attention.”

Youngster days now distant in my life’s rearview mirror, I’m returned several decades later to Nonnie’s yard, now my own residence. Paying attention is what I have set out to do recently, and this is my 21st evening to commune with the lightning bugs. They fly around the old merry-go-round and flit among fruitful pear trees that Livvy Meador planted in 1947.

A wonky navigator, the lightning bug bumps into things sideways, and it seldom lands on what it hits. Bottom-heavy with bioluminescence (using a chemical called luciferase), it resembles a small honeybee. When its light switches on, its flight trajectory seems to shift upward. When it senses you approaching, it moves away, slowly—sort of a lumbering light melody in the dark. Imagine a lightning bug version of Rimsky-Korsakov’s Flight of the Bumblebee, minus its frenetic sense—more of a Nyquil feel, draping a curtain of dusk in which to make an escape.

Their time is short-lived over the summer’s arc, but if you pay attention in the season, you’ll spot these monarchs of the night.

Keep a Ball jar handy. ■
