Folks who move to Kerrville, over time, become Kerrverts [Vegan Panhandlers, July 2024]. Nothing perverted is meant by it; it's more about conversion.

OUR NOSY NEW NEIGHBORS

BY PAM LEBLANC

Decades after bears were forced out of West Texas, they're traipsing back and causing a ruckus

In 1994, when Alida Lorio and her husband moved to the quirky Terlingua Ranch development north of Study Butte, where off-the-grid shacks sprout alongside hipster hideouts in the desert of far West Texas, they never expected they'd be living among black bears.

That changed in 2022, when several of the large, furry omnivores began ambling through their 110-acre, cactus-dotted backyard and diving for greasy pizza boxes in a dumpster.

"It's like Terlingua Ranch just got invaded by bears," Lorio says. "We have an arroyo right behind our house, and they were using that as a highway."

Lorio reported the animals to Texas Parks and Wildlife Department officials who connected her with researchers at the Borderlands Research Institute at Sul Ross State University, up the road in Alpine. They set up traps and collared some of the animals as part of an ongoing, multiyear project to learn more about their movements.

Bears, they've discovered, are making a comeback in Texas. And as the animals expand their territory beyond just West Texas, it's time for Texans to prepare to live alongside them.

HOMeward BOUND

Black bears once roamed across much of Texas, from the Big Bend to the Pineywoods, the Panhandle to the Rio Grande, but habitat loss and overhunting—along with ranchers who killed them over fears for their livestock—decimated their population. By the 1950s, they had been extirpated from the state.

A remnant population survived in the remote mountains of northern Mexico, though, and began to rebound. In the late 1980s, a few bears wandered across the Rio Grande and into Big Bend National Park. Now they've been spotted outside the park's gates, along the Rio Grande and even as far as the Hill Country.

"A lot of that is due to the protected landscape, restrictions on hunting bears in Texas and most importantly, a change in people's attitudes in the last 50 years," says Matthew Hewitt, a wildlife research assistant who works on the Borderlands Research Institute's black bear project.

The influx of the animals indicates improving habitat, but it also means an increased likelihood that humans will cross paths with bears, who are drawn to garbage, outdoor grills, deer feeders and pet food.

And that sometimes leads to conflict.

"Human-bear interactions are going to start becoming more common as bears continue to recolonize," Hewitt says. "We're working to get Texans in general to realize bears are a real thing and they do exist here."

In 2020, someone shot and killed a bear that roamed into a Del Rio neighborhood. In 2022, a bear nicknamed Oscar began hanging around a dumpster outside a barbecue restaurant in Terlingua. The animals have popped up in Laredo, the Davis Mountains and Guadalupe Mountains National Park, too, and last September, TPWD officials trapped and relocated a bear on the outskirts of Uvalde, 85 miles west of San Antonio.

Three years ago, Melanie Kaihani noticed a bear on the 243 acres of land she'd just purchased near Sanderson, southeast of Fort Stockton. She set up a wildlife camera and struck gold: a bevy of bears cavorting beneath a deer feeder and climbing a salt lick to take a dip in the water tank she constructed for wildlife. (You can watch their antics on Instagram at @bigbendcountry.)

"With their size and teeth and claws, you'd expect them to be really intimidating creatures, but they're really just big, goofy raccoons," says Kaihani. She notified researchers, who advised her to quit filling the deer feeder. "If they had opposable thumbs, they'd rule the world."

For now, no one really knows how many black bears live in Texas, where they're still considered threatened and hunting them is banned. "More than a dozen, less than a thousand," Hewitt says. "Possibly a couple hundred."

Researchers want to know more about the bears—which have ears shaped like castanets; oval paws with candy corn-sized claws; eyes the size of a quarter; and a distinctive, musky odor—so they're fitting them with collars to track their movements.

Their diet includes mostly plants: prickly pear tunas, acorns, wild persimmons, berries and seeds from piñon pine cones. They also eat insects and roadkill, and researchers in Texas have documented one incident of true predation (a javelina). Full-grown males typically weigh up to 300 pounds.

BEARS WILL BE BEARS

Twice a year, in the spring and fall, Hewitt and others from the Borderlands Research Institute load baked goods and fruit into live traps they set on land where bears have been reported.

"We have learned that bears sure do like doughnuts," Hewitt says.

When the trapdoor shuts behind a bear, the researchers get a text alert on their phones. Someone is always within a 90-minute drive.

"If a trap goes off, it's boots on ground," Hewitt says.

BEAR NECESSITIES

- Never feed or approach bears.
- Secure food, garbage and recycling.
- Remove bird feeders when bears are active.
- Never leave pet food outdoors.
- Clean and store grills and smokers.
- Alert neighbors to bear activity.

“We jump out of bed, drop what we’re doing and drive out to the trap site.”

The researchers use a dart gun or jab stick to anesthetize the bear. Once it’s unconscious, they check its vitals; gather biometric data; attach tracking tags; and take hair, blood and tissue samples. Finally, they attach a rubber collar equipped with a transmitter and battery pack so they can follow the animal’s movements.

So far, they’ve collared about 30 bears, including five on Kaihani’s land near Sanderson and a couple on Lorio’s property in Terlingua Ranch.

“We have been extremely surprised by the sheer size of the area these animals are using,” Hewitt says. “We’ve seen some 80-mile movements from Terlingua Ranch down into Mexico.”

Another surprise? The bears are apparently thriving in the harsh, prickly environment of West Texas.

That’s why Borderlands researchers and scientists with TPWD want to educate the public on how they can safely coexist with the animals.

“Bears get into problems when there’s food involved,” Hewitt says. “Outside that, they’re good at keeping to themselves.”

By removing food that attracts bears, storing grills where bears can’t access them and installing bear-safe dumpsters, people can lessen the odds of a problem, Hewitt says.

If you do encounter a black bear, remember that it’s likely to scamper off if threatened or scared. Stay at least 100 yards away, and if you accidentally find yourself in close proximity to one, continue facing it and back away slowly. Bear spray is a good tool if a bear acts aggressively.

Also, consider yourself lucky.

“Take a second to marvel at a cool critter in a cool place,” Hewitt says.

OH, BOTHER

Back at Terlingua Ranch, Lorio and her husband say they’re learning to coexist with their new neighbors.

“William and I are adaptive, and we figure the bears were here first,” she says. “So we just made some adjustments on how we dealt with garbage.”

They now store trash indoors. They rinse out pet food and other food containers to eliminate odor, and they put chicken bones in the freezer until trash pickup day. Bear-proof dumpsters have been installed in the rural neighborhood too.

Although not all her neighbors appreciate the bears as much as the Lorios do, Alida says she enjoys observing them.

“A lion is kind of regal, but bears look like you’d want to go have a beer with them,” she says. “The rare times that you do see them, it’s like a gift from Mother Nature.” ■

BY BRANDON WEAVER

IN THE SUMMER

of 2023, Betty

McCord Studzinski caravanned to Alaska from her home in Georgetown, north of Austin, with 12 other RVers. The majority made the trek in large 45-foot motor homes, but her recreational vehicle was the smallest of the bunch: a 17-foot Texas-made travel trailer perfect for her and Tonka, her bulldog.

“They were breaking down here and there,” says Studzinski, 78. “We had no issues at all.” She and Tonka covered 11,000 miles on that trip. Her favorite part was the wildlife. “They were everywhere,” she says. “And the scenery was just breathtaking.”

Studzinski has seen 49 states and many national parks with her Casita trailer in tow and has no plans to slow down. This year, she’s planning a trip to Maine and the Maritime Provinces of Canada.

Texas was the top destination for shipments of new RVs in 2023, according to the RV Industry Association, but our state also produces its very own travel rigs. Casita, Capri Camper and Sportmobile are niche manufacturers compared to the corporate behemoths, and each of these companies has a wait-list for every RV that they build right here in Texas. The folks who buy these vehicles are loyal, and for them, it means buying into an ethos of community, since they don’t have to go through a dealership.

Each of the companies’ RVs take unique forms. Sportmobile’s converted vans are like turtle shells—you live and drive in your home. Casita makes small, fiberglass egg-shaped trailers that you tote behind you. And Capri makes the classic truck camper for pickups.

An RVIA study found that RV ownership has increased 62% over the past 20 years, with nearly a quarter of owners aged 18–34. These are a few of the intrepid travelers who love their Texas-built homes on wheels.

Betty McCord Studzinski loves her Casita Spirit Deluxe camper. “I hardly ever go back to a place I’ve been before,” she says.

LARRY PANCAKE IS a professional saddle bronc rider and music and rodeo promoter from Amarillo.

“I started rodeoing when I was 12,” he says. “My seventh grade PE teacher taught me to rope.” The Capri camper is a mainstay for professional cowboys like him. The campers are so iconic in Western culture, several have been featured in the TV series Yellowstone.

And they’ve been custom-made in Texas since 1969. In 2003, the company set up manufacturing in the tiny town of Bluff Dale, southwest of Fort Worth. They offer four models to top every size of pickup, with retro styling on the outside and modern amenities inside.

Pancake has owned four Capri campers, and his current one sits atop a 1997 Freightliner chassis. He spends about 150 days a year in it, hunting elk in New Mexico, riding broncs and promoting events across the U.S. The interior is decorated with a neon flamingo and a Welcome to Las Vegas sign.

“Anytime I leave the house, I’m in my Capri. I don’t rent hotel rooms,” Pancake says. “I like having my own space.”

His favorite feature is his Capri’s blackout shades that keep the interior completely dark in the daytime and under streetlamps. At big rodeos, there are sometimes hours between rotations. “I can watch a movie or take a nap,” Pancake says. “The blackout shades are huge.”

He also had Capri build a dream rig from his childhood rodeo days. The Bronc Stomper is a 1977 Chevrolet C20 Camper Special with a Capri camper on it. It’s a show truck he uses to promote his National Finals Rodeo events in Las Vegas.

“When I was a kid growing up in the ’70s, you had made it big time if you had a Chevy Camper Special with a Capri camper on it,” Pancake says. “You either pulled horses with it or rode bulls. That’s what the elite rodeo rig was.”

TOTE

STUDZINSKI, THE AVID RVer from Georgetown, has owned just about every type of home on wheels—from a pop-up tent trailer to a massive motor home.

“I never could find the right size for me,” Studzinski says. “I thought being a single female, traveling alone, with just a dog, I needed an engine-driven vehicle.” That way if she felt unsafe camping, she could go from her bed to the driver’s seat without exiting the rig.

Studzinski likes to boondock (camp off-grid, without hookups), but when all you have is one vehicle, you’re likely to lose your spot if you leave briefly and drive to a trailhead or into town. So she started looking at trailers and settled on Casita.

The tough little fiberglass trailers have been built in

TURTLE

CHARLES BORSKEY SET up shop in El Paso in 1961, converting Volkswagen and Ford vans. In the following decades, his company added innovations like “penthouse” tops (expandable roofs for sleeping) and four-wheel-drive conversions. In 1984, Borskey moved Sportsmobile to Austin.

I built my first van in 2005 with Sportsmobile, a four-wheel-drive Ford Econoline. The interior was sparse, with a compact cabinet, microwave, TV and a small “garage” area in the back for my mountain bike.

These days, the company offers standardized floor plans but also has an infinite selection of custom options to build your Goldilocks van. I chose the minimalist approach and christened my go-anywhere machine the Travel-All.

My first excursion was a shakedown trip to the Big Bend. The penthouse top, which raises above the van’s roof, withstood a blustery windstorm in Terlingua, and the four-wheel-drive chassis had no problem navigating the rough and rocky Black Gap Road in the backcountry of Big Bend National Park.

I deemed the Travel-All ready for a remote expedition in Colorado and drove it deep into the Rio Grande National Forest, inching down an impossibly steep Jeep trail to a campsite along the rushing headwaters of the Rio Grande. I spent four glorious days in absolute solitude next to a Texas river born in Colorado.

The author and his camper outfitted by Sportsmobile. It eats highway miles the way he eats breakfast tacos—with glee and fervor.

I quickly outgrew the Travel-All’s sparse interior, so back to Sportsmobile I went.

In 2007, a few years after Mercedes-Benz introduced their sleek Sprinter van to the American market, I ordered one from Sportsmobile, one of the first certified outfitters in the U.S., and christened it Bruce. Unlike the Travel-All, it ate highway miles like I consume breakfast tacos—with glee and fervor.

I drove it all over the Western states, from Carmel-by-the-Sea, on the coast of central California, to the Grand Canyon, where my wife and I honeymooned in it with our trusty beagle, Pizza. In the 2000s, the Mercedes Sprinter van was uncommon, but now they’re ubiquitous. Ford and Dodge offer their own Euro-styled vans, and Sportsmobile does conversions on those as well out of their facility in North Austin.

Texas since 1983. Their current manufacturing plant is in Rice, south of Dallas, where they produce five models that are 17 feet long. The molded two-piece fiberglass design is built more like a boat than an RV. When a hailstorm damaged Studzinski’s home, her Casita, which sits uncovered outside, sustained no damage.

She purchased her Spirit Deluxe model in 2019 and had it outfitted with 325 watts of rooftop solar panels and four 100-amp-hour batteries. She bought a Subaru and promptly loaded up Tonka and went to Big Bend National Park, where she camped in the Chisos Basin campground.

The sites are small, but her little fiberglass “egg” fit perfectly, and with all her solar power, she could run her fridge with ease. Finding her perfect RV has fueled more wanderlust for Studzinski.

“I hardly ever go back to a place I’ve been before,” she says. “There are so many other places on my list that I want to see.” ■

MESSAGE FROM GENERAL MANAGER/CEO
KATHI CALVERT

Looking Back, Looking Forward

I CANNOT BELIEVE we are at another new year. Where did the time go? I'm sure many of you have felt the same as I do, wondering how the year has gone by so fast.

Houston County Electric Cooperative is no different. Days turn into months, and months turn into years. We pause for a minute with each passing season but get lost in the business of the day-to-day as we navigate our next challenge. We spend our days working. Then, we look up realizing how much has changed.

As we embark on a new year, we would like to share some of our accomplishments and plans for the future.

A significant portion of 2024 was focused on storm recovery. The storms last spring packed a powerful punch and kept coming back for more.

Then, we had an unusually early hurricane in July. Our members may not realize, but work from major storms extends long after your lights are on. Our response during widespread outages is much like emergency room triage. How do we safely restore as many as possible? We use temporary measures to safely get lights on fast. We have to go back for permanent repairs. While we would rather spend effort improving service, we are proud of the dedication and determination our employees exhibited during restoration efforts.

With every storm, we learn and always try to improve on our service to members. Whether it's more communication or efforts to harden the grid to prevent outages, we definitely prefer you to have electricity at all times. We took the opportunity to convert overhead lines to underground near Elkhart where we frequently have problems with hazard trees. We are testing fault indicators in various locations to assist with faster restoration.

We continue to enable broadband deployment and work with internet providers as required by law. Progress is not easy, and there is always a cost. Many of our members have been upset by contractors on your property without permission. We know you would prefer that no one was on your property. Houston County EC would prefer that no one attached to our poles. However, your federal and state elected officials are trying to improve rural economies with high-speed internet for greater job opportunities, education access and healthcare services. That is an effort we do support. There will be more fiber build-out in our service area. We will always be here to answer your questions, but also know this is not a Houston County EC initiative. This is what we are required to do as a utility.

Speaking of what is required of utilities, we have to allow open access to our system. The energy landscape continues to change. We have received numerous interconnect requests for both load and generation. New types of load, including data centers, crypto mining companies and battery storage services are seeking interconnection. Some of these applications would quadruple the energy demand of our system. On the generation side, we have more solar and battery storage applicants of the same size and scale. These activities will not happen overnight and require engineering studies and significant investments. Our goal as your cooperative is to protect our rural member base and mitigate both financial and reliability risks from these other companies.

Next year I hope I will write this article from our new office facility, a facility designed to better serve you. As we head into a new year, please know we are always working for you, and we wish you a healthy and prosperous 2025. ■

Stacy is a man of faith who leads by example.

After 35 years with Houston County Electric Cooperative, Stacy, chief operating officer—transmission, is retiring this month to enjoy time traveling with his wife, Jennifer; to visit his grandchildren; and perhaps fish a bit more.

We are grateful for his leadership and dedication to our members. He will be greatly missed. But, don't worry, Stacy has agreed to continue cooking for our Annual "Fish Fry" Meeting. ■

Why Electric Co-ops Replace Utility Poles

YOU PROBABLY DON'T pay much attention to the utility poles throughout Houston County Electric Cooperative's service territory, but did you know they're the backbone of our distribution network?

Strong, sturdy poles ensure a reliable electrical system, which is why we routinely inspect the poles on our lines. Throughout the year, our crews check for decay caused by exposure to the elements. They know which poles are oldest and conduct inspections through a rotational process. Typically, a standard wooden distribution pole is expected to last more than 50 years.

Occasionally, poles need to be replaced for reasons besides decay and old age. Weather disasters, power line relocation and car crashes are potential causes for immediate replacement.

When possible, Houston County EC communicates when and where pole replacements will take place so you stay informed of where crews will be working.

Here's a quick breakdown of how crews replace a utility pole.

Crews will start the process by digging a hole, typically next to the pole being replaced. The depth of the hole must be 15% of the new pole's height.

Next, the new pole must be fitted with bolts, cross arms, insulators, ground wires and arm braces—all of the necessary hardware for delivering safe, reliable electricity. Then crews safely detach the power lines from the old pole. The new pole is then raised and guided carefully into position, and the lines are attached, leaving the new pole to do its job.

So the next time you come across a Houston County EC crew replacing a pole, use caution and know that this process ensures a more reliable electric system for you, our members. ■

Spinach-Stuffed Jalapeño Peppers

- 25 jalapeño peppers
- 1 package cream cheese (8 ounces), softened
- 1 pound frozen spinach, thawed and drained
- 1 pound processed cheese spread
- 1 can tomatoes and green chiles (13.5 ounces), undrained
- 1 teaspoon onion powder
- 1 teaspoon garlic powder
- 1 pound bacon

- 1. Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Coat a baking sheet with cooking spray.
- 2. Cut peppers in half lengthwise and remove seeds and veins. To reduce spiciness, soak in cold salt water for 20 minutes.
- 3. Mix together cream cheese, spinach, cheese spread, tomatoes and chiles, and spices. Stuff the peppers with the cheese mixture and place on baking sheet.
- 4. Cut bacon slices in half. Lightly pan-fry and drain. Place one piece on top of each stuffed pepper and secure with a toothpick.
- 5. Bake 20–30 minutes or until bacon is browned and stuffing is bubbly.

EPA's Power Plant Rule Is Wrong for America

Co-ops need options to meet growing energy demands

HERE AT HOUSTON COUNTY Electric Cooperative, we work hard to keep the lights on every single day. But these days, we do so much more than that.

Without electricity, remote workers can't log on and do their job. Businesses can't reach their customers. Students can't attend class and finish their homework. Families can't visit their doctor or attend worship or community meetings. Heating and cooling our homes, manufacturing American-made products, even charging our cars—all these things depend on reliable, affordable electricity.

That's why we're so concerned about the Environmental Protection Agency's new power plant rule to limit greenhouse gas emissions from existing coal and new natural gas power plants. In general, starting in 2032, the rules require increasingly stringent carbon dioxide emissions controls at coal and natural gas power plants. Requirements would vary based on the type of unit, how frequently it operates and how long it will operate.

This rule jeopardizes our co-op's ability to provide the reliable and affordable electricity our business and residential members need. It will reduce the amount of electricity our nation produces at a time when we need more electricity than ever.

America's electric cooperatives provide safe, reliable and affordable power to 42 million Americans in 48 states. It's a big job, and it's not getting any easier.

Data centers, new manufacturing plants, and American households and businesses all require an increasing amount of electricity. In fact, our country's power consumption is expected to hit record highs this year and next. Grid planners have forecast that by 2028, we'll need another 38 gigawatts of electric capacity to meet our needs.

That's like tacking another California onto our electric grid.

At the same time, the amount of electricity we produce is shrinking as always-available plants are shut down.

This growing demand—and shrinking supply—is why the North American Electric Reliability Corp. has warned that 19 states could see rolling outages over the next five years during times of high electrical usage, including during life-threatening cold snaps and heat waves.

The EPA's power plant rule will make things worse. It will force America's electric co-ops to take more 24/7 electric generation off the grid. And we know what that means—higher energy costs for consumers and less electricity to go around.

Beyond that, the rule is unlawful. It exceeds the EPA's authority under the Clean Air Act and disregards Supreme Court rulings. It also requires the use of carbon capture and storage—technology that's simply not ready—under unrealistic timelines.

The goal of the EPA power plant rule is to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, something America's electric co-ops already are doing. From 2010 to 2021, co-ops more than tripled our use of renewable energy.

By investing in solar and wind power, developing energy-storage projects, and promoting energy efficiency, America's electric co-ops are leading the way to a cleaner energy future in ways that make sense locally.

Meanwhile, the energy future outlined by the EPA means more outages, greater uncertainty and higher electric bills. That's not the right approach for our co-op members, and it's not the right approach for America, either.

We encourage you to reach out to your senator and member of Congress to express your concerns. ■

Roaring Success

Meet the teacher who turned an upsetting incident into a burgeoning business

LERIN LOCKWOOD LIGHTS up whenever she recalls the day in 2011 that ended badly. Then a high school art teacher and softball coach in Marble Falls, outside Austin, she was playing catch before a game when a softball slammed into Lockwood's glove and she felt a sharp sting on her ring finger.

"When I pulled off the glove, I realized my engagement ring was flattened," Lockwood says. "I'd lost a diamond out in left field, too. I dreaded telling my fiancé."

Determined never again to damage or lose her jewelry, Lockwood, a member of Pedernales Electric Cooperative, invented a solution. The Lion Latch, which she named after her favorite animal, is a round, two-piece container just big enough to safely store a piece of jewelry. It uses a carabiner ring to secure the lid and attach to larger items, such as key rings, backpacks or water bottles.

Her softball story has since become one of many testimonials for Lion Latch, the business Lockwood launched in 2015. Ten years later, her startup company has grown from developing prototypes of her mini container to marketing thousands of patented Lion Latches made of unbreakable polycarbonate plastic.

As the CEO of her own company, Lockwood manages three part-time employees at the Lion Latch headquarters, located in a small commercial building in Burnet.

As for her treasured ring, she did get it repaired. She did marry her fiancé, Trent Lockwood. And she did become an entrepreneur intent on perfecting her product and learning how to run a business.

"My first ones weren't big enough," Lockwood recalls. "So I enlarged it to hold my husband's collegiate ring and wedding band. After that, people started asking me for their own Lion Latch. I'd say, 'I'm just a teacher. I can't afford to manufacture these.'"

Then she learned about Kickstarter. Through the online funding platform, she raised $14,500 in presales, which covered production costs of her first Lion Latches. "I went to all the local gyms and stood on the back of parade floats, handing out my Kickstarter fliers," she says. "My Burnet County community helped me create the Lion Latch. And they've supported me ever since."

For the next three years, Lockwood focused on teaching and coaching. In the meantime, she sold Lion Latches online and packaged orders in her living room. When jewelry stores called, she learned how to wholesale. To broaden her customer base, she went to trade shows.

Her first break happened at Atlanta's AmericasMart, where she connected with Good Morning America. That led to a Lion Latch clip on The View in 2019. Then Lockwood appeared live on GMA. More than 8,000 orders poured in. To meet demand, Lockwood hired some of her high school seniors to help with shipping.

The next year, a big dream came true when she pitched her invention to potential investors on Shark Tank, the business reality TV series. She didn't get a deal, but thousands of orders flooded her website.

Wanting to free up more time for her company and family, Lockwood quit teaching in May 2021. At home, she and Trent have two children, Bowie and Thorn. She continued to run Lion Latch out of her living room. Then TikTok came calling in March 2023.

"They wanted me to be one of their first shops with TikTok Shop," she says of the social media app that shares user-created videos. "They boosted my Lion Latch videos in return for helping them to build the platform. My sales went through the roof—like 1,200 orders a day!"

So she moved her business into the commercial space and bought a printer that enables customers to special-order Lion Latches imprinted with their logo or message—or animal prints, sports emblems and other themes.

Along the way, Lockwood has wanted to pull her hair out on occasion. For example, lots of trial and error went into finding U.S.-based manufacturers. Copycat ring holders have also been a headache. Patents, she discovered, are difficult to protect.

She's learned a lot. Her top advice to entrepreneurs: Grow slowly.

"Don't be in too big of a hurry to grow your business," she says. "When you rush decisions, mistakes can be made, and you'll lose both time and money."

Lockwood says she loves inspiring people. "If you have an idea, you can do it!" she says, flashing one of her bright smiles. "It's just going to take a lot of grit. And patience." ■

Striking It Big

War vet Frank Saucier left behind a big-league career to chase oil

BY ANNE R. KEENE • ILLUSTRATION BY ERIC KITTELBERGER

IMAGINE GIVING UP a promising baseball career to become a landman and wildcatter in the oil business. That's what Francis "Frank" Saucier did when he saw more potential in oil than baseball.

At 98, the Amarilloan and former outfielder for the St. Louis Browns (now the Baltimore Orioles) has seen almost a century of booms and busts and war and peace.

Saucier was born in 1926 on a Missouri farm, educated in a one-room schoolhouse and carried water to wheat field workers for 25 cents a day at age 6. By 10, the youngest of six children founded a fur-trapping enterprise with a Remington rifle, earning money for used books.

As a teen, Saucier heard about the attack on Pearl Harbor as he and his cousin walked home from a movie. "A Model T pulled up with folks who shared the news. I had no idea where Pearl Harbor was," he says with a soft-spoken West Texas drawl in a recent interview at his home, where he displays baseballs signed by Hall of Famers Satchel Paige and Rogers Hornsby. "My family did not own a radio, so I raced home to tell them about the bombing."

The day after his 17th birthday, Saucier enlisted in the Navy, where he enrolled in the V-12 officer training program at Westminster College in Fulton, Missouri. As an apprentice seaman, Saucier says, "My rank was so low I could crawl under a rattlesnake's belly under a wagon wheel with a stovepipe hat on."

Saucier served on an amphibious warfare commando team—a forerunner to the Navy SEALs. "President Truman dropped the first atomic bomb when we were about 1,000 miles from Japan," he says. "Though there was no alcohol on board the ship, we had a big party and thought, 'By golly, we made it.'"

Strong farm-boy wrists from swinging an axe and milking cows had helped make Saucier a star hitter in college. After the war, he signed a minor-league contract, won three batting titles and was named player of the year in 1950 by The Sporting News.

Still, fame never stopped Saucier from taking offseason roustabout jobs in the oil fields, where he invested his baseball earnings to drill for crude, which was then selling for about $3 a barrel.

He signed with the Browns in 1951, realizing a childhood dream conjured on the wooden grandstand at Sportsman's Park in St. Louis. He played with or against Ted Williams, Yogi Berra, Minnie Miñoso and Paige along with Texans Dr. Bobby Brown and Eddie Robinson.

But Saucier is most remembered for a wacky public relations stunt engineered by Browns owner Bill Veeck, who brought in 3-foot-7-inch Eddie Gaedel to pinch-hit for Saucier during a game.

In 1952, Saucier was at spring training when he was called back to active duty during the Korean War. He'd already been dealing with chronic problems with his throwing arm, and after his discharge in 1954, he took a job as a district landman for Humble Oil Co. in Tyler.

Saucier never attended another major-league game. He worked in the oil and finance business until he was 85.

Regrets? No way.

"Baseball opened a lot of doors for me," he says. "I just happened to be in the right place at the right time." ■

Hearty Soups

Enticing ingredients and easy options have you set for the coldest of days

BY VIANNEY RODRIGUEZ, FOOD EDITOR

Pozole verde is one of my favorite soups to make when feeding a crowd. Pozole is a traditional Mexican soup that can be made with chicken or pork. (Verde means green.) It's the absolute perfect bowl to enjoy all winter! It comes together quickly and is even tastier the next day for lunch.

Pozole Verde

SOUP

- 1 pound tomatillos, husks removed, rinsed
- 1 large onion, halved
- 1 jalapeño pepper, halved, seeds removed for less spice
- 2 cloves garlic
- 1 tablespoon dried oregano
- 10 cups water, divided use
- 1 teaspoon kosher salt, or more to taste
- 2 teaspoons ground black pepper, or more to taste
- 1 bunch fresh cilantro, coarsely chopped
- 4 pounds boneless, skinless chicken breasts
- 2 cans white hominy (15 ounces each), drained and rinsed
- Lime wedges, for serving
- Salsa, for serving

FRIED TORTILLA STRIPS

- 6 corn tortillas
- ¼ cup vegetable oil
- 1 teaspoon salt

- 1. SOUP Add tomatillos, onion, jalapeño, garlic, oregano, 4 cups water, salt and pepper to a large pot. Bring to a boil, reduce heat, cover and simmer 15 minutes.
- 2. Using a large slotted spoon, remove tomatillos, onion, jalapeño and garlic from the broth and add to a blender with 1 cup of the cooking water and cilantro. Start blender on low, then work up to high until ingredients are smooth. Taste and add salt as needed.
- 3. Add blended sauce, chicken and the remaining 6 cups water to a large pot. Bring to a boil, reduce heat, cover and simmer 30–45 minutes or until chicken is fork-tender. Remove from pot and shred.
- 4. Add shredded chicken and hominy to the pot. Simmer 15 minutes. Taste and adjust seasoning.
- 5. FRIED TORTILLA STRIPS Slice tortillas into ½-inch strips. Heat oil in a skillet over medium-high heat. Add tortilla strips in batches, stirring often, and fry until crispy and lightly browned. Remove from oil, place on a paper towel-lined plate and sprinkle with salt.
- 6. Serve soup hot with tortilla strips, lime wedges and salsa.

Nonna's Quick Pasta Soup

MARIA MEARS
DEEP EAST TEXAS EC

This is an easy dinner option that can be ready in under 30 minutes. It features orzo, a tiny, rice-shaped pasta that absorbs the flavors of the broth beautifully. It's a versatile dish that can be customized by adding your favorite vegetables, herbs and protein, like chicken or beans.

- 5 tablespoons (5/8 stick) butter
- 5 cloves garlic, minced
- 4 cups chicken broth
- 1 1/4 cups orzo
- 1/2 cup finely grated Parmesan cheese, divided use
- 2 teaspoons salt, or more to taste
- 1 teaspoon ground black pepper, or more to taste
- Fresh parsley, minced (optional)

1. Melt butter in a 2-quart saucepan over medium heat. Add garlic and sauté 1 minute, stirring often to avoid browning.
2. Pour in chicken broth and orzo and stir to combine. Bring to a boil, then reduce heat to medium and simmer. Cook orzo according to package directions, stirring occasionally, until al dente.
3. Remove from heat and stir in half the Parmesan cheese. Add salt and pepper.
4. Ladle into bowls and top with remaining Parmesan cheese and parsley.

MIDSOUTH EC

Barile's chowder is a comforting and flavorful dish that combines the sweetness of corn with the rich, savory taste of shrimp. It's an easy-to-make, satisfying meal that feels indulgent yet light, making it an ideal choice for weeknight dinners or cozy gatherings.

- 6 slices fully cooked bacon, diced, reserving 1 tablespoon fat
- 1 tablespoon (1/2 stick) butter
- 3 stalks celery, diced
- 1 small yellow onion, diced
- 4 cloves garlic, minced
- 1 teaspoon salt, or more to taste
- 1 teaspoon ground black pepper, or more to taste
- 2 tablespoons flour
- 2 1/2 cups milk

- 1 can whole kernel corn (15 ounces)
- 1 can cream-style corn (14.75 ounces)
- 1/2 teaspoon cayenne pepper
- 1 pound shrimp, peeled and deveined
- 1/3 cup half-and-half
- Green onions, minced, for serving

1. Add bacon fat, butter, celery and onion to a Dutch oven or large, deep saucepan. Cook over medium heat, stirring often, until tender, about 4 minutes. Add garlic, salt and pepper and cook an additional 30 seconds.
2. Sprinkle flour over the vegetable mixture. Stir to coat and allow to cook about a minute more. Slowly add milk to the mixture, stirring to eliminate any lumps.
3. Add both cans of corn and cayenne. Let cook until slightly thickened, about 5 minutes.
4. Add shrimp and cook about 3 minutes. Stir in half-and-half.
5. Remove from heat, taste and add salt and pepper if desired.
6. Serve warm, topped with bacon and green onions.

Chicken and White Bean Soup

JENNY HARTSFIELD
BRYAN TEXAS UTILITIES

Hartsfield's soup is another great recipe for a busy week, delivering the rich, slow-cooked flavors of an all-day soup in a fraction of the time. White beans pair with green chiles to complement perfectly poached chicken. Serve with a crusty bread or tortilla chips—so scrumptious.

- 4 boneless, skinless chicken breasts
- 7 cups water
- 2 teaspoons salt
- 1 dried bay leaf
- 1 tablespoon olive oil
- 1 tablespoon (1/8 stick) butter
- 2 medium onions, diced
- 2 cloves garlic, minced
- 2 teaspoons ground cumin
- 1 1/2 teaspoons dried oregano
- 1 teaspoon cayenne pepper

- 4 cans white beans (15 ounces each), undrained
- 2 cans mild chopped green chiles (4 ounces each)
- 8 cups grated Monterey Jack cheese
- Sour cream, for serving
- Tortilla chips, for serving

1. Add chicken, water, salt and bay leaf to a Dutch oven or large saucepan and cook over medium heat. Bring to a boil, reduce heat and cover. Simmer until chicken is fork-tender, 15–20 minutes.
2. Remove chicken and shred, reserving broth.
3. In another Dutch oven or large saucepan, add olive oil, butter and onions and cook over medium heat 15 minutes, stirring often.
4. Stir in garlic, cumin, oregano and cayenne and cook an additional 2 minutes. Add white beans, green chiles, shredded chicken and reserved broth. Bring to a boil, then reduce heat and simmer 10 minutes.
5. When ready to serve, stir in cheese. Serve hot with sour cream and tortilla chips.

COURTESY CHET GARNER

Nuts About Pecans

After Missourians built the world's biggest, Seguin rallied to reclaim the crown

BY CHET GARNER

HERE IN TEXAS, we like to have the biggest of everything, whether it's boots, burgers or bulls. So I wasn't surprised to learn that we even claim the original world's biggest pecan, proudly displayed on the lawn of the Guadalupe County Courthouse in Seguin, about 35 miles east of San Antonio. I decided it was a story (and a nut) I needed to crack for myself.

Seguin has a population of about 35,000 and boasts a lively downtown shaded by towering pecan trees. It's appropriate considering pecans are one of the town's most valuable resources and grow plentifully along the Guadalupe River.

So after filling my belly at Burnt Bean Co. with a platter of Tex-Mex barbecue, it was time to fill my head with nutty facts.

I crossed the street and found the original giant pecan in all its glory in front of the courthouse. While not technically a real pecan, this concrete rendition was placed here in 1962 and measures more than 5 feet long and 2½ feet wide. It was impressive for sure but not as dramatic as the battle it spawned.

Twenty years later, in 1982, farmers in Brunswick, Missouri, claimed the title with a 12-foot pecan that weighed over 12,000 pounds. In 2002, Seguin native John Pape set out to make a bigger one but didn't know about the one in Missouri's pecan capital, and so his 11-foot pecan on wheels never wore the crown. But in 2010, the city of Seguin banded together and crafted a 16-foot pecan that brought the title securely back where it belongs.

The current king of pecans is polished up and ready for photos just outside the Pecan Museum of Texas in Seguin. Everything is bigger in Texas, even if it takes a few years. ■

Blade Stunner

Beautifully made, magnificent to look at, this knife is a work of art at only $99

It's not often you happen upon a bladesmith who has gem cutting skills. But finding needles in haystacks is what we do best, so when we saw this master craftsman's handiwork, we made certain to procure some of these Southwestern masterpieces to complete our collection.

The stainless steel blade, bolster and pommel are exquisitely etched and would have looked great with a less ambitious handle. But the results of overachieving are stunning here. The turquoise-blue colored handle is ablaze with assorted stones like jasper, marble, sunstone, and coral that have been hand cut and inlaid in a Southwestern motif.

But we don't stop there. While supplies last, we'll include a pair of $99, 8x21 power compact binoculars and a genuine leather sheath FREE when you purchase the Sedona Knife.

Miles of Memories

A North Carolina transplant was shaped by the state she longs for

BY LAUREN SENA
ILLUSTRATION BY
CHANELLE NIBBELINK

THERE'S A LINE in the song Miles and Miles of Texas popularized by Asleep at the Wheel that goes something like this: I looked into her deep blue (or brown) eyes, and this is what I saw: I saw miles and miles of Texas.

As someone who grew up listening to this song, I have always claimed that this is the greatest compliment I could get, but lately I've started to think more about that.

If that's what you see when you look into my eyes, then you're seeing all of me.

You're seeing my favorite places: the Lady Bird Johnson Wildflower Center in Austin, hiking trails in Bastrop State Park, Naegelin's Bakery in New Braunfels and the house of my adoptive grandparents, where I learned to make fried chicken and where my brother went hunting for the first time.

You're seeing where I am the happiest: my dance studio in San Marcos; our local pool, where I spent half my summers; the Cabela's by the water tower in Buda that I used to beg my parents to take me to when I was about 5.

You're seeing my home: the kitchen where we made cookies with our mom and where she danced with me before bed. You're seeing the old mulberry tree down the street where we would stuff our faces with berries every summer and the backyard where my brother and I played every day.

You're seeing what makes me me.

But I have been criticized for saying I'm from Texas because I have lived more of my life outside of Texas at this point.

That always stings a bit. Because they weren't there when my dad got off the phone with his boss and told us that we were being transferred. They don't know how it felt when I was being torn away from everything I knew and loved—my miles and miles of Texas.

And now I come back every chance I get.

The memories I made in Texas I will cherish forever. The feeling of being home is something I will miss whenever I'm not in Texas.

The second I cross back over that border, I get the silliest grin on my face and my eyes shine just a little bit more just knowing I'm home again. I will forever refuse to call anywhere else home.

So if someone were to look into my eyes and see miles and miles of Texas, they would be seeing me in a way very few people do. They would be seeing me for exactly who I am. For what makes me me is Texas. ■

The future of hearing aids has arrived

NEW! HORIZON IX HEARING AIDS

Alarming fact: More than 48 million Americans hear so poorly that their quality of life significantly suffers as a result.

The problem: Most wait too long to act, hoping their hearing will improve on its own. Sadly, it never does. But now, a game-changing device is making waves across the industry, and experts say it's the biggest breakthrough they've seen in over a decade.

It's the new Horizon IX hearing aid.

Horizon IX is currently the best-selling device at renowned U.S. company, hear.com, developed by top audio engineers from Signia. Their goal was to combine the best possible speech clarity with a comfortable, invisible design using cutting-edge German technology.

"It's a hearing aid people actually want to wear," says hear.com co-founder Dr. Marco Vietor. "It offers amazing speech clarity and smartphone connectivity in a virtually invisible design — and all that for a reasonable price!"

What makes them so special?

It's one of the world's first hearing aids with dual processing. This is special because it's the first time engineers have been able to pack not one, but two state-of-the-art computer chips into a device this small. And with double the power comes double the clarity.

What do Horizon IX hearing aids have to offer?

- Amazing Speech Clarity™
Effortlessly understand every word, thanks to dual-processing
- Bluetooth connectivity
Stream music and phone calls directly to your hearing aids
- Rechargeable lithium-ion batteries
28+ hours of battery life and a portable case for on-the-go charging
- Easy, comfortable fit
All-day wearing comfort, easy to combine with glasses
- Free smartphone app
Adjust settings for every listening situation easily via smartphone

This means that Horizon IX hearing aids offer all of the usual benefits of modern hearing aids with the added bonus of something completely new: they can process speech and background noise independently, then combine them for unparalleled, crystal clear sound.

Where can I get Horizon IX?

As of December 2024, hear.com has partnered with over 1,200 specialists nationwide, ensuring Horizon IX devices are available across the U.S.

Now, you can join 425,000 Americans who are already enjoying effortless hearing with Horizon IX. Simply text "HEAR" to (786) 618-2573 or visit hear.com/tx to check if you qualify for a 45-day no-risk trial:
